Occupational Health in Construction

Introduction

There have been big improvements over recent years in reducing the number and rate of injuries to construction workers. Despite this, construction remains a high-risk injury and accounts for a high percentage of fatal and major injuries. What is less recognised is that construction is a high-risk industry for health issues too.

Every year more working days are lost due to work-related illness compared to injuries. Statistics reveal that construction workers have a high risk of developing diseases from a number of health issues. These can be devastating for individuals and families.

This half day event will provide up-to-date information on preventing some of the occupational diseases in the construction industry. It will highlight these and explain what the risks are and how to prevent them.
